Dear Stuart:

When you were in Washington some time back you told us that Mabel and you had once spent a very nice holiday at some small place in or near Charlottesville, Virginia. Do you recall the name?

Elizabeth and I are planning to spend a few days of quiet and rest during the Christmas holiday and will try the place you visited, if you remember the name or how to get there. We need a rest--finally and at long last, the manuscript of our book is finished!

I enclose with much immodesty a copy of a letter I received quite recently. This was wholly unexpected, for despite the request of the Britannica that I limit the revision to 6,000 words, I went to over 8,500. Hence I fully expected them to fire the manuscript back to me with instructions to cut it down to size. Not only was there not even a murmur as to size, but also they sent a check very promptly and followed it up with the letter of which I send you a copy. Please return it. Doing the Britannica revision cost me considerable effort and diverted me from the work on the book--but now I can see the wisdom of doing the job as I did. And don't neglect to remind yourself that the ms. had to receive the full clearance treatment by the authorities before I could submit it to the Britannica. Getting it written so that it could be cleared--and still have it remain as interesting and useful as the Britannica letter implies--that seems to have been a good trick. Maybe I don't have to be too modest about the letter!

Otherwise things are in good shape, too. Very recently I sold practically all of what we owned in the way of stocks--I thought I'd get out while I had fair or better than good profits. Maybe I made a mistake but I don't stay awake at night worrying about what we had in the market.

With our very best wishes for a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year, and love to Mabel.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM F. FRIEDMAN
